Gender

No impact anticipated – key vacant and derelict commercial properties were identified without reference to the characteristics of the owner. Whilst the majority of property owners to date have been men it is not considered that the policy would have a differential impact when applied to women.

Disability

Properties brought back into use with the assistance of the vacant and derelict commercial properties working group would be required to be Equalities Act compliant. Bringing vacant and derelict properties back into use would improve the street scene, making it more accessible for people with a physical disability or visual impairment, for example by removing obstacles or potential hazards.

Race

Key vacant and derelict commercial properties were identified without reference to the characteristics of the owner, but several property owners have been of Asian origin. No issues have been encountered to date with regard to language, but translation would be provided if required.

Religion/Belief

It is not permissible to spend the public funding available for vacant and derelict properties on religious buildings. Islam forbids the lending or borrowing of money at interest so practicing Muslims may have difficulty securing finances to restore vacant properties.

Welsh Language

Correspondence and documentation can be made available in Welsh if required. No requests have been received to date.

Gender Reassignment

No impact anticipated – key vacant and derelict commercial properties were identified without reference to the characteristics of the owner. No differential impact in the application
